Mezze Grill

Brothers Raymond and Patrick Davoudi have been partners in the restaurant business all their lives. Their father was a chef and the house they grew up in was adjacent to the restaurant. They bussed and waited tables together all through their childhood and now they run their own restaurant in San Diego's hip Gaslamp District. Their Greek roots inspire the cuisine they describe as Greek Fusion. It's contemporized and fused with whatever is hot and happening in the food world. These two single guys love to party. The restaurant, with it's flaming plates, belly dancers and bachelor parties caters to a young, late-night scene.

Raymond:

Raymond is the face of the place and the boss. The restaurant was his idea, but after opening it on his own he realized he was in over his head. He called the one person he knew had the skills to co-manage a busy restaurant and watch his back: his brother Patrick.

Patrick:

Patrick is the force behind the scenes. He does the books, the orders and manages the staff. He's the quintessential "little brother." He's the quiet one, always there to take a ribbing from Raymond, but brothers will be brothers – and when their rivalry goes too far, sparks fly.
